Passionate Special People Create Extraordinary Products, in Aruba

Over the holiday I received an elaborate gift from Ha’Bon at Paseo Herencia, incredibly packaged Yerb’i Lamunchi, lemon grass soap bar, a body cream customized to match my personality traits, with encapsulated jojoba oil, and an Arubanita Lotion Bar, it’s really a stick — it glides on like deo, enriched with Cocoa and Shea Butter.

As I said the gift was incredibly package with original artwork, charming graphics, and held together by jute twine. The package proudly stated it was all eco-friendly and made by disabled persons.

We first heard about Ha’Bon in 2015 when it was created by a former news anchor at Tele Aruba, who had had it with politics. She went home, as in retired, and devoted some time to her candle making hobby, among other things such as domestic bliss and cooking. She shared the fact she was feeling homely with a business acquaintance, and the astonished look on his face convinced her it was time to look at her hobbies from a different angle.

The astonished acquaintance was marketing and sales guru Warren Stanley, and the message was com’on girl, you can do better than that.

Which proves my favorite saying right: When the student is ready the teacher appears.

Before you know it, Naline’s artisanal soap factory took off with the help of a group of disabled persons, from two local foundations, Trampoline pa Trabao and Funari, entrusted with wrapping the products. Trampoline, a coaching organization designed to help disabled persons integrate in the work place, provided the guidance. Naline shares that her sister is a person with special needs and growing up close to such a creative individual, gave her the idea she could collaborate with the foundations on her project.

Having studied the secrets of beauty potions, utilizing natural, organic ingredients she opted for a line of moisturizing, freshly scented soaps, which was introduced within a few months to Bucuti & Tara Beach Resorts, the island’s leading green properties. They contracted Naline to produce Ha’Bon soaps for their guest rooms. Then they were followed by Divi Resorts.

(The brand’s name is a fun play on words in Papiamentu: while “habon” means “soap,” the brand name also highlights the word “bon,” which means “good.”)

Last year, the Ha’Bon’s product line grew to include body lotions and shower gels, the salt and sugar emulsified scrubs are coming soon, they will join the candles and candle holders, made from the wood of the native Kwihhi tree.

In December, Ha’Bon opened at Paseo Herencia, where the complete line is on display. The space is clean and minimalistic with an oversize carved stone sink where customers may experience the products.

The way Naline sees it, your first day of work at Ha’Bon is your last day at work. Her team is passionate about the chemical free, natural product and under the guidance of two professional teachers, the clients of Man Na Obra, another foundation supporting intellectually challenged adults, do wonders.

“We focus on their strength,” states Naline, “and maximize it.”

Dedicated to eco-friendly practices, the company now also recycles hotel soap left overs, and candles they collect from churches, they give back to the community and champion the cause of intellectually and physically challenged locals.

We’re passionate special people, Naline concludes, we create extraordinary products, and you can get hold of them at 16 different outlets, including the flagship store at Paseo Herencia.

Sure, you can pick them up as gifts at the Reina Beatrix airport.

Aruban native Naline Heilbron turned what was originally a vacation in Colombia into a life-changing adventure. A visit to an Indian preserve in the South American country introduced Naline to the resourcefulness of the people there. “My encounter with the natives was an eye-opening one—they only rely on the land around them,” explains Naline. The visit prompted Naline to return to Colombia to learn more about holistic forms of therapy. Once Naline researched mass-produced brand cosmetics and the added chemical and artificial ingredients that companies use in these products as well as the animal testing many of those companies use, she was determined to treat her body and the environment better. “The only way to make sure that what I am putting on my skin is all-natural was to make my own soap,” she says.

Naline Heilbron's eyes sparkle when she talks about her line of all-natural, made-in-Aruba soaps and bath products.

The path to success wasn't an obvious one for the former Aruban national news anchor.

With the help of a loyal and dedicated group of special young ladies with disabilities, she's grown from a one-woman operation to supplying soap to a number of hotels and gift shops on the island.

➤ The inspiration to make soap came to Naline while getting lost in nature on an Indian reserve in Colombia, she says.

There, she started learning about holistic therapies.

"I realized that if I wanted truly natural, chemical-free products for my skin, I'd have to make them myself," she says.

So she took classes and became a certified advanced soap maker. With the help of her mother and niece she started making small batches of soap.

Her first break came when the managing director of Aruba's largest tour operator offered to help market her soap.

True to his word, he coached her and gave her helpful suggestions.

When the exclusive Bucuti & Tara Beach Resort called, she knew she needed to grow, and fast. To keep up with demand, she'd started working late into the night making hundreds of soaps at a time out of wooden soap molds the size of a wine bottle, cutting them by hand to the required size for their guest rooms.

"It takes a minimum of four weeks for the soap to cure the traditional way," says Naline. She doesn't use glycerin and she and her employees hand-cut and wrap each soap individually.

Fortunately, she bumped into a job coach, specialized in working with people with special needs.

After growing up with a sister with epilepsy, she felt this could be a good opportunity.

"The beauty of positive energy attracts more positive energy. We started with three special young ladies and now we have about 16 team members from different foundations," she says.

What's so special about Ha'Bon products? They're a silky smooth mixture of skin-loving oils and butters such as olive oil, coconut oil, shea butter, cocoa butter, avocado oil and jojoba oil and they're infused with sea salts, flowers, herbs and fruit, including papaya from Naline's own backyard. Using Ha'Bon soap is like using a soap and lotion in one.

Ha'Bon donates leftover soap to charity foundations and disaster relief organizations, like after Hurricane Irma devastated neighboring St. Maarten. "One hand is meant to help yourself and the other is to help someone else," says Naline.

They sell everything from soap to personalized lotions, luxurious whipped body butters, sugar scrubs and more.

Lotions come in small Mason jars and are whipped like buttercream and topped with golden encapsulated jojoba micro beads. Hand-shaped bath bombs are sprinkled with colorful sparkling Epsom and Himalayan salt.

All the products are still hand-wrapped and all the packaging is hand-made. Visitors can even try the products and wash their hands in a centerpiece fountain in the middle of the store.

"We measure success not by the products we bring, but by our true core value of environmental stewardship, respect and integrity," says Naline.

To accomplish her goals, her crew needs continuous guidance. Fortunately, she's surrounded herself with good people, including teachers and experienced coaches from foundations like Man Na Obra ('Hands at Work'), one of the organizations on Aruba that helps people with special needs.

"None of us are perfect, but we don't focus on our weaknesses," says Naline. "We just maximize our abilities." ■

work together to create extraordinary products.*

Our core values showcase the true soul of Ha'Bon. A micro-company where passionate people work together to create extraordinary products and unforgettable experience that touches people hearts. All our skincare products are handmade in an adorable old Cunucu house; our production facility is located in Tanki Leendert. We use natural ingredients; we formulated without Parabens, Sulfates, and mineral oil, Triclosan, DEA, Paraffin or Petrolatum and NOT tested on animal. We incorporate in our products local ingredients, such as fruits, flowers, beeswax, sea salt and herbs.

The increase in demand prompted Ha'Bon Aruba to extend the positive scope of Ha'Bon by enlisting the services of three local foundations to help in making and wrapping the products: SVGA Centro Man Na Obra, Trampoline pa Trabou, they prepares people with limitations for work, and Funari, a foundation for the handicapped. Our special associates operate with their dedicated job coach. Ha'Bon also works with students from the local vocational school, providing on-the-job guidance and training to help them in the workforce.

Today the Ha'Bon Team consists of persons who are in some way special, but creative and clever, when given the opportunity.

We remain "green", while also giving back to the community, by reprocessing the remnants of soap and donating them to selective groups on the island. Ha'Bon is a proud sponsor of Fundacion Pa Nos Comunidad, Red Cross Aruba, Wilhelmina Fonds Aruba, Cas Speranza Nobo (Local halfway house).

Our strength lies in our commitment with our team members and their future. We measure success not only by the products we bring to our customers, but also by remaining true to our core values of safety and environmental stewardship, respect and integrity.
